THE EVOLUTION OF CONSCIOUSNESS.

Then the man married. He thus be-came conscious of a larger unit, a group, consisting of himself, his wife and his offspring.

As these children married and had children the group enlarged, and his consciousness enlarged with it. He now fought for and cared for not only his the rights of all the Smiths. In course of time his people became part of a duchy, county, or other geo-graphical division.

absorbed in a nation, the people of which spoke the same language, came from a common stock and were governed by one ruling dynasty. Then he became conscious of himself as a German, an Italian, a Frenchman, an Englishman and so on. Each larger consciousness swallowed up the preceding. At first his own life was the main thing, but afterward he stood ready to sacrifice his life for his stood ready to sacrifice his life for his family, tribe or nation.

As a member of a nation he came into the emotion called patriotism. The larger the group the more intense and ideal and "neble" was his passion. To be an Englishman, for instance, was felt to be much grander than being a Yorkshireman or a Highlander.

But patriotism is not the end. Nationalism is but a stop by the way in human progress.

But patriotism is not the end. Nationalism is but a stop by the way in human progress.

The imperfection of nationalism and its attendant enthusiasm, patriotism, is shown by the present war. To continue the world's business under the government of independent nations is to invite periodical disaster.

The next step is to be the consciousness of the world. This is the necessary and final step in the development of man.

Jesus never mentioned patriotism, because, being clear visioned, he saw that it was not final. His ideal was a worldwide citizenship, a society in which all kindred, tribes and tongues should co-operate. Hence the attempt to harness Christianity to patriotism has always been difficult. Christianity is hardly workable except in a worldcitizenship.

Patriotism may therefore be good or bad. It is good, compared to feudalism or tribalism: it is evil when it inter-

The greatest conflicts are not between good and evil; they are between the good and the better.
